There's something special about dogs, and the ones with the most personality are the ones that we usually love the most. But have you ever wondered what's going through the head of that ingeniously disobedient darling of yours when you look at him? Cindy Blanchette has, and that's what motivated her to turn the life of her beloved Australian Shepherd Douilly into a novel told from his point of view. Here's a brief synopsis of the book:

If you have ever loved a dog, this book is for you. It is based on a true story about the author's dog, Douilly, an Australian Shepherd who came into her life as an eight-week-old puppy. He was adventuresome and mischievous. The story is told from his point of view, which is quite different from his owner's point of view. You will laugh at his silly antics, and relate to the owner's hardships when dealing with his behaviour issues. He tells his tales about each chapter in his life, from the obedience ring to the herding arena. Some offer comedy and some offer sadness but, if you have ever loved a dog, you will relate to these tales.

The novel is nice, light reading that is suitable for an adult dog lover but also appropriate for an animal-loving tween or teen. My thirteen-year-old sister Sharlee had a chance to read the book and really enjoyed being able to explore the relationship between a dog and its owner from a different point of view:

The book starts with him as a puppy and preparing to become a show dog. However, Douilly states "I was destined to be a show dog, not necessarily a good one but a show dog nonetheless." One small problem is that Douilly gets car sick, so even getting to the shows was an adventure in itself. He even tried attending training class but that didn't go well either. In the following quote from Douilly, I think he sums it up well for all us dogs who have endured hours of classes:

"One thing I learnt about my human friends is that they repeat themselves a lot. They use words like sit over and over again. Now, I'd heard her the first time and I knew what sit meant so why did she always feel the need to repeat herself? I liked to think I was an intelligent pooch, so when she insulted me this way I completely ignored her, hoping she would go away."
