This title is a collection of papers on one of the most controversial topics of public international law. In addition to concepts, this compendium presents arguments and views on the dichotomy of monism and dualism written by a respectable group of contributors with various fields of interest and points of view on international law. Among the fifty-four articles by judges and acknowledged scholars of international courts and other important institutions from 28 countries is Professor Paust's Basic Forms of International Law and Monist, Dualist, and Realist Perspectives (p.244 to 265).

A practical guide to major issues addressed by current immigration law and by prospective reform efforts, this title is co-authored by Jacob M. Monty, one of our 1993 graduates and the founding and managing partner of Monty & Ramirez LLP. Employing as little legal jargon as possible, this title is easy to comprehend and follow, and should be kept as one of the ready reference or training manuals by employers.
