I've always enjoyed books with infants and big, strong men that are out of their comfort zones! I guess that's why I enjoyed this one! I like the transformation of Jared as he goes from loner, wanderlust man who travels the world to realizing what is important - a family and people who care about him. Jenny was an okay heroine although I didn't like her as much. I understood her need for a family of her own given her history but I didn't particularly like how she kept saying her opinion over and over to Jared when it wasn't her business since she was his employee! It was a little tiresome! Overall though, I really liked it!

Booties and bottles were not part of Jared Montgomery's vocabulary. In fact, the confirmed bachelor would rather face a rattlesnake than hold a fidgeting baby. Yet he'd promised that his orphaned goddaughter wouldn't grow up without a father. Now he was sharing his home with a newborn and her lovely nanny, Jenny Stratford.

When Jenny Warwick is asked to provide cover for a DEA agent so he can infiltrate the small town where she lives, she protests none of her neighbors would be involved with drugs. Reluctantly agreeing to provide a cover story for the agent, she soon finds the man expects more than a mere place to stay. Before long everyone in town thinks there's a romance blooming between them.

Eyeing the remaining stairs, he counted fourteen. Slowly repositioning his crutches, he took a breath and lurched up one more step. His broken ankle throbbed, his good leg burned with the unaccustomed double duty, every bone in his body ached, especially his ribs. Not broken, just bruised. He couldn't tell the difference.
