We pleased to be able to offer you some great new release dvds at very special prices: Gayby is an irreverent comedy about straight-but-over-dating Jenn and gay bestie Matt who decide to have a baby together - the "old-fashioned way"! What ensues is a funny and touching film about friendship, growing older, loneliness and the families we choose to create! Another popular recent release is romantic comedy The Men Next Door, about Doug, who unknowingly ends up dating two different guys who are actually father and son! This is a hilarious and sexy farce. In a more serious vein is Aussie film Dead Europe, adapted from the controversial Christos Tsiolkas novel of the same name. This is a dark, brooding examination of racism, the wounds of war, sexuality and exploitation, and has a great performance by Ewen Leslie as the gay photographer at the heart of this tale.

"A black cockaded bicorn clamped fore and aft. Black arching eyebrows. Black deep-set eyes. A high black-laced collar. Dark stubbled jowls. Dirty fingernails." There are several things about the opening line of Captain Bligh's untold story that might pique your interest, per se, especially if you're into history or hirsute hot guys (preferably both). It might seem like a niche market but there are plenty of good reasons to hook up with this rollicking debut novel by local writer de la Haye. The gay colonial history buff confessed to a "niggling need" to probe into an aspect of our forebears' lives which some may choose to forget but which cannot be ignored. This tale of romance and risk on the high seas is at once historical and hysterical, for all the right reasons.

The goal is to drink and taste our way through 2001 unique bottles of wine - all the time keeping track of the wines, the locations where we sipped, the friends we shared the bottles with and the good times that were had. We can only guess how many bottles are behind us and aren't included here, but it's better to start late than never at all.

I always enjoy seeing the wines that other people buy and I definitely found the choice of a Beaujolais in the farthest point of Australia to be an interesting one. Through most of our trip Down Under, wine lists - and often entire bottle shops - have been decidedly Australian. The Aussies are real home court drinkers when it comes to wine.

Then again, Richard isn't your everyday Aussie either - and, no, he doesn't wear his vintage naval outfit all the time. He did appear willing, however, to don it at a moment's notice. If only because, every time he sported the jacket, he got around to plugging his historical novel of Captain Bligh's untold story of forbidden love - Beyond the Capes.

I know as much about Pierre Naigeon as I do about the times of Nelson's Navy. But a little Google shows that Naigeon is a fifth generation winemaker who's company produces 50 different wines, including three Grand Crus and several Premier Crus Burgundian wines. The big reason for all the different wines is that they take single vineyard to the extreme with their Burgundian Pinot Noirs. They also make a number of village and regional offerings - and, so it would seem, at least one Beaujolais or Gamay Noir.

It might have been Moss Wood's introductory level but this was no light Beaujolais. It was a classic Bordeaux blend - with a touch of that extra, Aussie kick of dark fruit. Amy's is made from fruit grown on three of Moss Wood's six vineyards. The final blend for the 2010 vintage was 50% Cab Sauv, 32% Petit Verdot (don't see that too often), 12% Malbec and 5% Merlot.

Merlot Boy lined up dinner for our final evening and called up Bluey and Rosie, his newly transplanted Perth buddies, and they joined us for cocktails - performing an invaluable service by helping to finish off much of the remaining vodka. A few martinis to the good, we wandered down the street and found one of the local pan-Asian restaurants that populate the area. Scanning the wine list for something to match with pork intestines (Boo's and Rosie's contribution to the family style meal) isn't one of my strong points, but I did see a wine that piqued my interest.

Crouchen Riesling sounded like a sequel to the movie, Crouching Tiger Hidden Dragon. Turns out Crouchen is yet another varietal that I've never heard of before. The Crouchen grape originated in the Western Pyrenees of France; however, it's hardly grown there anymore. Writer, Jancis Robinson, notes that there are records of the grape being shipped to South Australia in 1850, where it was long confused with Semillon, "which Australians were wont to call Riesling." It was called Clare Riesling until 1976 when French ampelographer (or grape classifier), Paul Truel, toured Australia and identified it as the little known French varietal. The grape is also grown to some extent in South Africa where it is often called Cape Riesling.

This blend from Brown Brothers (the winery that also brought the Tarango grape to my attention for the first time) is 2/3's Crouchen and 1/3 Riesling. Light in alcohol at 9.5%, the wine was a touch off-dry and it had a good whiff of passionfruit on the nose and taste on the palate. The sweetness actually did match well with the spices and curries that coursed through our plates as well.

It was grand of Merlot Boy and Margarita to fly across the country to join us in Perth and Margaret River. They helped make our visit all the more fantastic. As sad as it was that our trip was coming to an end, I suppose all the untasted wines and missed locales will just spur us on to come back again.

The realization finally hit us that it was time to click our heels and prepare to leave Oz. Our 4.30 wake-up call wasn't all that far off. So, with good-byes to good friends all in order, we shuffled off to finish packing - and to count the number of wine bottles we were still lugging around. With both of us facing a two bottle allowance at Canadian Customs, we figured we were going to have to face the reality of paying extra duty. Bigger. I think the trip was worth it though.

bad-ass, balls-to-the-wall glory. This is a man who stole a machine gun before he was seven and lost his left eye when a good friend shot him in the face. As a member - and the president - of the infamous Los Valientes motorcycle club, he broke more laws and had more fun than any six of the coolest guys you know. One of the last true Outlaw Bikers, Deadeye knows what it means to be a man, take shit from no one, and have tattoos that actually say something. Riding, drug dealing, and sending men to the hospital with his bare hands, Deadeye made himself a legend among bikers - all the while making sure his daughters never got mixed up with guys like him. In his own words, Deadeye tells it all. From earning his colours with an outlaw motorcycle club to his steady diet of drugs, sex, violence, and crime, this is his story: true life, yet larger than life, and full throttle all the way. Book Description: iUniverse, United States, 2005. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Brand New Book  Print on Demand ."What am I supposed to do with my life?" Little did Rich Hayes imagine that on a beautiful October afternoon in 2001 he'd get the answer to the question he'd been asking most of his life. Along with that answer would come an explanation of why things are as they are in the world today. "What God Told Me To Tell You" contains the message he was given. Comprised of only three simple sentences, this message carries profound implications. If accepted and understood by each of us, it has the potential to change our lives and the world. In a world torn by religious differences, with violence and atrocities being touted as the Will of God, never has there been a greater need for this message to be heard. It "is" what God wants you to know. Bookseller Inventory # AAV9780595340088
