Wendy Orr was born in Edmonton in Canada at 1953. Just before she turned three they moved to France in a tall block where there were no pets allowed! Her next move was to a small house also in a France village and it had a huge front garden. She started school there and learnt how to speak French. She made a best friend girl named Jacqueline.

Wendy Orr always wanted to be a writer and always wrote short stories and poems during class. She started seriously in 1986. At the end of that year she wrote a story book Amanda's Dinosaur. Ever since that she had been writing on and on. In 1991 Wendy had a serious car accident and had to give up work as an occupational therapist and her novel Peeling the Onion is a book about it and Wendy's recovery. Wendy writes because it's the best way to explore ideas and find out what life's about.

A. Two girls wrote to Wendy Orr and asked them to write a story about them. The answer was no because their life would be too boring. Every now and then she would take a ferry out to an island where her grandparents lived. Wendy Orr was about eight. She always liked to imagine it as two girls running away from an orphanage to live on the island.

I'm a Canadian born Australian author, mostly of books for children and young adults. My books include: Nim's Island (the book that the film was based on), Nim at Sea, Peeling the Onion, Ark in the Park, The Princess and her Panther and Raven's Mountain For a complete list, see my website, www.wendyorr.com
