Jenny Cheshire was born in Leeds, Yorkshire in 1963. By the age of ten she had written a series of adventures for young children and during her teens she developed this interest further. Having excelled in English at school, Jenny chose a career in International Television Distribution. During this time, she travelled extensively selling programmes to foreign TV stations, specialising in the Caribbean area. Her first published novel, Fire and Passion was written when Jenny was expecting her son, Sebastian and was leaving the television arena to concentrate on writing and motherhood. She followed this up with a series of three children's illustrated books called Secret Kitchen Tales, and another called Birthday Secrets which won the David Thomas Charitable Trust Award in the Children's category 1999. Having established herself as an award-winning author, Jenny went on to write her second novel, Echoes of the Past. She currently lives in rural Worcestershire with her husband Sam and their two children.
