Plunging into a wild, unexplored jungle, they discover a forgotten city, a long-lost explorer, a ball game played in a walled court, and an underground dungeon. This gripping, funny and clever adventure is written with Odo Hirsch's customary flair.

Bartlett and the Forest of Plenty is about three explorers: Bartlett, Jacques le Grand, and Gozo the little apprentice. They go exploring in this unexplored forest and find a hidden town named Run. Gozo wants to prove himself to Bartlett as an explorer by wanting a real adventure. Well, here is his chance to prove that he has Inventiveness, Desperation, and Perseverance to save Bartlett and Jacques, but can he do it?

Odo Hirsch takes his explorers -- Bartlett, Jacques le Grand, and Gozo through a rift valley and into the mysterious forest beyond it -- a forest so mysterious that no one has ever crossed it, and no one has returned from exploring it. As they are trying to decide on a route to take them through the dense jungle, Gozo catches a glimpse of something white, away from their planned track. Bartlett and Jacques, while dubious that Gozo had seen anything at all, are willing to pursue that glimpse. The explorers' perseverance leads them after many days to the city of Run, where everything is plentiful, where crops grow effortlessly, where each person likes his work and does it for the benefit of the community.

Odo Hirsch does a wonderful job of setting the scenes in the story. He gives his characters clever verbal habits, and in some cases, gives them almost no dialog at all. The character of Elwood Tucker seems emotionally unstable and massively paranoid, which is in jolting contrast to the normalcy and integrity of the other characters. Your young adventurers will like this story, but they may not understand Elwood. Read more ’

Gozo wants very badly to be a real explorer, just like his friends and mentors Bartlett and Jacques. There have been lots of stories about a hidden civilization within the heart of the jungle they are exploring, so when Gozo thinks he sees a glint of something sparkling in the sun, he is sure it must be the lost city. Before long, the friends are hacking their way through the jungle. What they find, or more specifically, who they find, will be a surprise to all of them. And once they find him, will...more Gozo wants very badly to be a real explorer, just like his friends and mentors Bartlett and Jacques. "I want an adventure, Mr. Bartlett", said Gozo. "At least one!" But Gozo gets more than he bargained for when he plunges into the Forest of Plenty with Bartlett and Jacques le Grand. The three explorers soon find themselves caught in a web of mystery. Who is the unknown man controlling the ruler of the forest? Why does he want to stop Bartlett and Jacques leaving? And does Gozo have the Inventiveness, Desperation and Perseverance to set them free?
